Whether you like your house to be ocean-inspired or if you're just looking for some touch of magic and fantasy, this plant will surely bring those sea vibes in your space.

The plant known as Crested Senecio Vitalis is a succulent and it grows outward rather than toward a light source like most other plants do.

The plant can reach a height up to 2 feet and a width of 3 to 5. Its bluish-green color makes it a pretty decor to neutral-colour or ocean-themed rooms.

What Kind of Plant Is the Crested Senecio Vitalis?

The mermaid tail succulent originates from the cape of South Africa. It grows in winter whereas it's dormant in the summer time, which isn't the case with most other succulents.

It's very easy to maintain-it demands little water and care-it will grow well in a sunny or lightly-shaded area and it loves to grow in a well-drained soil or sand.

It’s great because it’s drought-resistant and it can survive without water and moisture for a long period of time, making it awesome for the forgetful plant owners.

If you want this plant in your home or office, check for it in your local plant store or search for it online, for example on Etsy.

Succulents Explained

Succulents are without doubt one of the most unusual and unique plants you can have. They have very thick leaves, roots or stems, which eases their adaptation in drier areas.

More than 60 plant families have some types of succulents; some of them are the agave, aloe, and the cactus family.
