She felt the negative effects of this on her own skin-while she happily shared photos of her lovely daughter Callia on social media, she didn't know she was actually putting her in danger.

Later on, she actually revealed her baby pictures were used on Facebook and Instagram. At first, she thought these were innocent pages until the images went into the wrong hands.

Baby Daughter's Photos Used on Child Pornography Website

After they were being reshared in social groups on the internet, the photos were then taken over by a pornography website where baby photos are edited and they're sexualized.

When the parents of these children found out, they did all they can to put down the website and also informed Amanda about her baby girl's daughter photos being used maliciously.

Amanda says this was a very traumatizing event for her, realizing her baby's photos were abused for pornography.

She recalls crying for 45 minutes when she was notified about this unfortunate event. Her partner couldn't calm her down-she was shaking and sobbing.

She thought this was all her fault as she shared the photos in the first. But, she says she would never doll her up like that-she doesn't want her baby to have makeup!!

Warning Other Parents to Be more Cautious with Their Baby's Photos

To learn more about these horrible websites, she set up an account.

She was shocked by the discovery-thousands of users with pedophile usernames. Her baby's photos had terrible comments by users on this Russian website.

Amanda explained that this is child abuse and she feels sick and sad for these babies.

Ever since this horrible discovery, she's been informing parents against sharing photos of their little ones online or to at least make a private account.
