As a Samoyed, Echo has fell in love in snow since the first day her owner Jennifer Wang took her in.

She tends to burrow her whole head into fresh snow and enjoys digging holes that fit her whole body!

And, one of these cute moments was caught on camera and went viral after it was shared on social media.

Dog Obsessed with Snow Moves into a Snow Cave

While on a walk with Jennifer and her cousin, Echo came across a snowy cave.

Wang and her cousin wanted to peek inside; however, Echo was a bit apprehensive. The cave was slightly covered by snow and seemed odd to Echo at first.

However, once she realized it was safe, she fell in love with this cozy cave instantly. Wang explained that when her cousin looked into the cave, Echo was still uncertain.

But, once she stuck her head in too, Echo found this a good sign and went inside as well.

From this moment on, she decided this was her new home and actually refused to come out. Although she eventually did, she immediately went back in.

Eventually, they did manage to head on their way; however, when they walked near the same cave after a couple of days after, Echo went inside right away.

Although the cave was almost completely covered by snow, Echo knew exactly where it was. She dug through the snow and set herself inside. And, she was having the time of her life, says her mom.

She lied there and chilled and munched some fresh snow. The fear she had in the beginning went away and she now considers this cave the ideal snowy hideaway. Sometimes, she hopes her mom would accept her living there forever.

One thing's for sure-she fits perfectly! Although Wang wasn't entirely on board with her plan, she realizes how much Echo loves snow and leaves her play for a bit.

Whenever they decide to continue their walk, Echo seems unhappy. She reluctantly continues on the walk with her hoomans, but seems to still hope that mom will take her on the snow cave hideout again.
